Sgt. Arno Graul

Graul claims two devices. One is an indicating device for RIGA D/F. He wants to patent it, he says, and objects to giving details. It is considered likely that no such device has been designed, and even if it has, it is completely unimportant.

RFP researches were claimed. All aims of the equipment shown were toward the analysis of the wave form of the audio note of a standard receiver.

The equipment was never finished; Graul claims that it was destroyed one and a half days from its probable completion date to prevent its capture by the Russians, which seemed imminent. It had been tested on only one transmitter.

Graul furnished circuits and a brief description. The man is a technician only, with great persistence and ambition. His equipment for this problem is childish in many ways. He has shown no conception of RFP as it is understood by us, and makes no use of transient phenomena, relay breaks, etc.

Graul is an obvious liar in many respects. No evidence is available to lead to a belief that he has or will accomplish anything of value. His chief characteristics are a love of telling trivial lies and an optimism concerning his inventions which seems wholly unwarranted. It is recommended that he be released.
